THE TIME CAPSULE
Runtime: 105 minutes

SYNOPSIS
In the near future, a jaded politician fresh off an electoral loss escapes with his controlling wife to the Southern lake house where he spent summers as a teen. Their vacation is disrupted by the appearance of his first love, who has just returned from a 20-year space voyage and hasn’t aged a day.

DIRECTOR’S STATEMENT
THE TIME CAPSULE is a movie set in the future, but it’s not about the future.

I grew up a nomad. My father’s job kept us on the move. By the time I turned 18, I’d attended 10 schools in four different countries, never staying anywhere for more than two years. Growing up, change was the only constant for me. I was a kid whose life was littered with countless “what ifs” – somebody who never got to live out any particular timeline, but who jumped in and out of others’ lives, always wondering: What if I had stayed in that particular school? Never moved from that town? Hadn’t been forced to break up with that girl?

THE TIME CAPSULE is a movie about how we all grapple with these questions about the past. Specifically, it asks if true love exists – “true” in the sense that it cannot be affected by time and distance.

In the tradition of THE TWILIGHT ZONE, this film uses an extraordinary circumstance to highlight and explore the human condition. Just when he is uncertain about his future, our protagonist literally faces a lost love from his past and is given the opportunity to answer the film’s thematic question. For me, the answer to that question is the romantic and hopeful one. It’s the feeling I recognize every time my wife returns from a work trip, every time my children grow another inch.

THE TIME CAPSULE explores two individuals as they come to realize that their love is indeed timeless regardless of where they are in time.
